ENGINEER CRIBBENS DIES VERY SUDDENLY

While His Train Was at Kelvin, the Enginer Drops Dead

Hayden, Ariz, Aug. 28.—James Cribbans, employed as engineer on the local freight running between Phoenix and Hayden on the Arizona Eastern raliroad, died very suddenly of heart trouble at Kelvin. He was out doing a little repair work to the engine while the train was waiting at Kelvin, at the time of his death. Mr. Cribbens was a young man and had been enjoying excellent health. The remains were sent to Phoenix where he had been residing. The local freight was delayed on account of the tragedy, one of the local ore freight engines going down to bring the train up as far as Hayden.

B. M. Blackman, chief time keeper for the Ray Consolidated Copper company, has returned from a week's visit with his folks in Phoenix.

B. H. Dozenback, mill foreman, has returned from a month's visit on the coast. Prior to his leaving Hayden, he was under the doctor's care for about a month and the trip has resulted in a considerable benefit to his health.

The San Pedro team defeated the smelter hasehall team by a score of 8 to 4. This is the first game of the series that the San Pedro team has won. The smelter team had only four of its regular players in the line up.

Miss Stella Lambert, after a few days' visit with friends in Phoenix, has returned to Hayden.

B. M. Burdick, head clerk for the Hayden Supply company, is spending a few days in Phoenix with friends.

The remodeling of the local school house has been practically finished, four rooms being divided off in each building, one large room having heen used in each building during last term. A building has been rented in San Pedro to be used as a primary class room for the Mexican scholars. School will probably open on the first Monday in September.

R. F. McCrae, mill foreman, has returned from a month's visit on the coast.

How Much Does Advertising Interest You?

By W. C. Kennga.

The real science of advertising is in its infancy, growing in importance every day.

Yet advertising itself is as old as man. Witness that Noah advertised prior to the fleed and those who needed his advertising profited; that Joseph used his own brothers to advertise the fertile lands of the Nile; that Sampson through his feats of strength was known the length and breadth of the land.

known the length and broadth of the land.

Today you advertise. Yes, Madam. you do! You give your neighbor a cake recipe and thus advertise your ability as a cake maker; your taste in the hat and clothes you wear; your children advertise your care of them; when you call on a friend you leave a card—advertising the fact that you have been to that perticular home.

The marchant or manufacturer calls on you through his "copy" in The Herald; telling you what he has to offer and asking for your patronage for the mutual benefit of you as reader and himself as advertiser.

Really you are more interested in advertising than you thought you were!

And because you are interested you will be reading from day to day the little talks on advertising which will appear in The Herald.

THE USE OF A GREAT MAN

One Has Recently Died in France, and People Are Inquiring What he Was

GRAND funeral was given in Paris a couple of weeks ago to Henri Poincare, of whom, probably, many readers of these lines have never heard. The procession to the grave was imposing. There marched, bare headed, through the streets, between sidewalks crowded with spectators, most of whom also respectfully removed their hats, a long double line of the most distinguished living Frenchmen. When the grave was reached impressive discourses were pronounced by M. Gusthau, who spoke for the government and the university by M. Claretie, who represented the famous Academic Francaise; by M. Painleve, who was the mouthpiece of the Academy of Sciences, and by many others whose names are better known to the public than was that of the subject of their discourses.

All the newspapers were filled with praise of the dead man, and all the subject of their discourses.

All the newspapers were filled with praise of the dead man, and all the fillustrated journals printed portraits of him. Everybody was assured, and the assurance was repeated from mouth to mouth, that France had lost one of her greatest lights whose renown would illustrate the pages of her history. Everybody felt proud because his country had produced so mighty a genius. But a singular fact soon became evicent—viz. that among the hundreds of this immense genius hardly any one had a definite idea of what he was or what he had done. They only knew that, somehow, he had been a great man.

During his lifetime it was said that there were only two or three men in Naturally, then, after the first sensation caused by the departure of this great genius had died away, the question heap healthy.

That question has been asked, and rather indefinitely answered, in many newspapers. It cannot be answered by giving a list of his 1500 works, for even the most popular of them, like the book on "Science and Hypothesis," are full of things which only the expert can read understandingly, while most of them are addressed to the elite of science, the narrow inner circle, to enter which requires extraordinary talent and years of application.

But it does not follow that some answer cannot be given. The best answer is twofold. In the first place, one that, somehow, he had been a great man.

During his lifetime it was said that there were only two or three men in all Europe who could comprehend him. It is almost certain that among those who pronounced eulogiums at his tomb there was none who could follow his work with complete understanding. Most of them did not know even the A-B-C of it.

Who He Was.

For Henri Poincare was a very great mathematician, perhaps the greatest mathematician, perhaps the greatest mathematician, perhaps the greatest mathematician. cipia" was as far beyond the intellec-tual reach of the average man as Poin-care's most abstruse work is touay, but now, thanks to the advance which it, itself, inspired, any boy in college, with a mathematical gift and proper application, can read the whole "Princi-pla" understandingly. In fact, it has been displaced by more recent work, just as Poincare's achievements will be superseded in the future.

just as Poincare's achievements will be superseded in the future.

Great men of this stamp are the pioneers of the human intellect, and happy is the country that can produce one in a century. It is the Napoleons, whose work is easily understood, that get the great monuments; it is these other geniuses, whose own times hardly know them, that uplift the race.

PREDICTS ANOTHER UPHEAVAL IN CHINA

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 28 .- The present government in China will be of short duration in the opinion of commodore C. J. Evres, R. N., formerly commander of the British squadron at Hong Kong. The commodore passed through Vancouver last night en route from Hong Kong to England.

"I look for another upheavel in China soon," he said. "The new regime there will not last long. The idea seems to prevail over here that everything is lovely in China, but the reverse is the case. The present government will be of short duration and the overthrow will come when we least expect it."

J. H. Hewitt, who organized in 1908 the Tyee Lumber company, a selling agency which went out of business in 1910, testified regarding his correspondence with Platt B. Walker, manager of the Mississippi Valley Lumberman of Minneapolis. regarding three cars shingles to a company in Davenport, which controled a company doing a mail order business Mr. Hewitt testified that he wrote to Mr. Walker that the shingles had been delivered without his knowledge to the mail order concern and that if he was doing any injustice to the wholelase and retail trade he would be glad to be advised.

In reply Mr. Walker wrote, he said, that it was generally known that the two companies were identical, and said:

"In behalf of the retail trade of the northwest, which we are trying to serve, we are glad to know that you are not disposed or willing to serve trait class of trade."

The witness testified that he was deterred from doing business with the mail order concerns because he did not wish to lose his trade with the retailers and he did not wish the retail trade to earn through the trade journals or through the Lumberman's association that he had sold lumber to the non-entical mail concern.
